

Social Media Reacts To Cancellation Of Ohio State-Michigan Game

After Michigan announced the cancellation of its annual rivalry game with Ohio State due to a coronavirus outbreak within the Wolverines' program, several current and former Buckeyes, as well as coaches, administrators and commits, took to social media to express their frustrations.

Below is a roundup of those tweets, including one from the Ohio State football program's official twitter account.

University president Kristina M. Johnson:

We are all disappointed, especially for our players and their families, that Michigan is unable to play The Game this year. Right now, our focus is on our student-athletes and what is best for them. We are in discussions with the Big Ten about possible next steps.
